PFIAB Contribution

It is common knowledge that there are inefficiencies in the over-all U.S. ELINT collection effort, many of which are attributed to overlapping responsibilities which contribute to a lack of effective coordination among the principal collectors. As a springboard for corrective action there have been many comprehensive studies performed, the most recent being that of the Eaton Committee. While we disagree with most of the Eaton Committee recommendations, the Committee did document valid areas where improvements should be made. These areas should not be discredited with the total report.
